

Mr. COUZENS. I can submit the proof that the Senator from Virginia was not there when this bill was drafted for submission to the Senate.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator did not need to be there to know that his colleagues on the Banking and Currency Committee are honest and upright men.

Mr. COUZENS. I did not charge that they were otherwise than honest and upright men.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; the Senator did. He charged that they were dominated by Wall Street, that they were dominated by the Federal Reserve Board, and I deny the assertion.

Mr. COUZENS. I assert that it was so, and it was clearly evidenced in the meeting when the Senator was not present.

Mr. GLASS. I do not know what was done at the meeting which I did not attend.

Mr. COUZENS. Of course the Senator does not.

Mr. GLASS. But I know what is in this bill; and the Senator cannot point to a provision of it that was advocated by Wall Street bankers.

Mr. COUZENS. No; that was taken out because there was a division among the committee.

Mr. GLASS. It was taken out, I venture to say, because it was the judgment of the committee that it should not be put in.

Mr. COUZENS. Oh, no.

Mr. GLASS. Had it been put in by either suggestion or dictation of Wall Street, the Senator might have had some justification for his accusation.

It is a serious matter for any honorable Senator to stand on this floor and bring such an accusation as that against his colleagues. If I could think that the Banking and Currency Committee of the United States Senate could be dominated by Wall Street, or by the Federal Reserve Board, or by the Comptroller of the Currency, or by all three of them combined, I should be ashamed to accept membership on it.
